

New gallery

Following success in New York and Beverly Hills, the new Sundaram Tagore Gallery has just expanded into Asia.

It's truly an honor to have this new member in the Hong Kong art scene. The new Sundaram Tagore Gallery is located in the heart of Hong Kong's art district, and covers 2,000 square feet. Sundaram Tagore said: "I do think that a gallery dedicated to arts should be under the gallerist's name, just like a signature on an artwork."

Their inaugural group show consists of five Eastern and five Western artists selected from the roster of artists that the gallery represents. Tagore continued: "This exhibition presents a visual to the exchange between Western and Eastern cultures, and will introduce audiences to our distinct aesthetic that we hope will be a welcome addition to the artistic scene in Hong Kong. We will also continue to host additional non-profit and cultural events, incorporating performance and installation art, literature, film and more. We will push the envelope."

A descendent of Nobel laureate Rabindranath Tagore, Sundaram Tagore comes from 14 generations of artists, writers and poets. Earlier this year, Sundaram was profiled by Forbes as "India's Art Ambassador."

Having completed his Ph.D. in art history at Oxford University, Tagore began his career as the Director of the Asian division of New York contemporary art gallery Pace Wildenstein. He has worked for the Peggy Guggenheim Foundation, Venice, and the Metropolitan Museum, New York, and advises major art institutions including the Museum of Modern Art, New York, Tibet House, and The National Gallery of Modern Art in New Delhi. In addition, Tagore was named one of the 100 Most Influential Asian-Americans in the US by Avenue Magazine.
