Known worldwide for his beautiful imagery of industrial landscapes, Edward Burtynsky's most recent series of color photographs titled Water will go on display at the Sundaram Tagore Gallery in Central. The series, which began in 2007, is the artist's largest and most ambitious project to date.

Photographing the dams on China's Yangtze River, the ancient step wells of India and dramatic erosion in Iceland, Burtynsky will show how human interference is depleting the earth's most precious resource.

In relation to this exhibition, the Asia Society in Hong Kong will host a screening of the film Watermark on May 10 at 6:30pm. The film follows the artist as he shoots images for his Water series. Ticket information for the screening is available on Asia Society's website here.
