Sundaram Tagore gallery opens in Hong Kong

Sundaram Tagore, a New York-based curator and gallerist, has recently announced the opening of a Hong Kong gallery. The gallery focuses on a dialogue between the cultures of East and West while filling the need for a better representation of international art in Hong Kong.

Faina Goldstein, born in St. Petersburg, will serve as the gallery's director. She comes to Hong Kong directly from New York and has been with the Tagore Gallery for six years.

In addition to bringing contemporary Indian art to Hong Kong, the galleries fresh contemporary international focus will include Jewish artists as well. The New York based Tagore Gallery included exhibitions of Israeli-American, Nathan Slate Joseph's work. His work is known worldwide.
