Summer has officially arrived! With the hotter temperatures arrive a seasonal slew of gallery exhibitions that illuminate the works of rising and experimental artists. In other words, it's the most wonderful time of the year for those who are passionate about the diverse voices of emerging or overlooked talents.

At the Artnet Gallery Network, we make it our goal to bring new artists to attention, not just in the summer but year-round, searching through the thousands of talented artists on our website and selecting a few we find particularly intriguing right now. To kick off the summer, we've selected five international artists we think you should know, showing at galleries in Mexico City, Dubai, and beyond.

The Indian-born, Detroit-based artist Neha Vedpathak (b. 1982) creates tactile, abstract paper compositions which she imbues with rich tones. Her textured constructions seem to float, hauntingly, in space, casting shadows against walls with lacy intricacy. The artist's unique process defines these works; she plucks at handmade Japanese paper with a pushpin, slowly separating the paper's fibers to create a gauzy base onto which she both sews and stains with pigments. The time-consuming process (each work can take weeks to months) engages the artists in a meditative process of slowing down. Currently, both new and older works by the artist can be seen in "I Dwell in Possibilities" at Sundaram Tagore Gallery in Singapore (through August 6). Her works can also be seen in the museum exhibition "Invisible Thread \(https://www.paradisecoast.com/event/invisible-thread/7497\)" at the Baker Museum in Naples, Florida.
